

Do you want to be the world's first Tech Ambassador?

What we offer

As tech ambassador for a day, you will become part of the TechPlomacy team and be at the forefront of Danish diplomacy. You will get hands-on experience with a packed and exciting day in Silicon Valley.

What is TechPlomacy?

Technology is changing societies and citizens' lives in ways that we couldn't have imagined only a few years back. As the first county in the world, Denmark has appointed a tech ambassador with a global mandate, dedicated to meet the technological reality of tomorrow by interrelating the world of technology with diplomacy.

The Center for Strategic & International Studies (CSIS) and the Office of Denmark's Tech Ambassador offer university students across the United States a unique opportunity to become the world's first Tech Ambassador for One Day.

Are you interested in how technology is affecting societies and governance? Learn why and how a stronger diplomatic connection between governments and tech can help prevent a "techlash", maintain social trust and cohesion, and make governance more agile.

Our challenge to you

Follow @DKTechAmb on Twitter and "Office of Denmark's Tech Ambassador" on Facebook. Send us a 1,000-word essay (maximum) or a short video where you answer one of the following questions:

How should political leaders react to the growing political, economic and social power that tech-giants are exerting today?

Today, technology is in many ways empowering us to exercise our human rights more fully, while it also prompts new challenges in relation to e.g. online privacy, surveillance and data protection. How should nation states meet this challenge?

How do we prevent a global digital divide and ensure that all nations and individuals reap the benefits of technological advancement?
